Nazi Party Rise to Power

The chart below identifies three major causes as to why the Nazi party became so popular in Germany in the late 1920s and early 1930s.

World War I	Weak Government	Economic Problems
▪ German War Debts from the Treaty of Versailles ▪ Loss of German colonies and valuable income from mercantilism ▪ Nationalism within Germany wanted revenge for the outcome and punishment from World War I	▪ The people had doubts about the post-war government, the Weimar Republic ▪ There were many arguments among the various political groups within Germany ▪ The people wanted a return to a strong leader such as they had seen with the Kaiser before World War I	▪ The national was under staggering inflation, in particular the cost of a loaf of bread ▪ The Stock Market Crash had created a global depression that had devastating economic effects on Germany ▪ There was a very high rate of unemployment, especially among the World War I veterans
